

Cannabis Practice

The field of cannabis law is relatively new, but growing quickly. Eighteen states, including New York and New Jersey, have already legalized recreational use of marijuana, and initiatives in states all over the country are looking to pass similar laws. McLaughlin & Stern prides itself on having the expertise to keep abreast of the rapid legal developments in this field, benefitting our clients who are interested in participating in the legal marijuana industry.

Right now, the law surrounding cannabis is in flux, especially in places like New York where the regulations for legally selling marijuana are still being worked out. On top of that, every municipality is poised to pass its own rules about how to handle marijuana legalization, including where smoking cannabis will be permitted and where it will be banned. This can make the prospect of opening any business that intends to sell cannabis products, or which permits people to smoke cannabis on the premises, potentially fraught with legal dangers.

However, it will likely not be long until the states start promulgating regulations about marijuana dispensaries. When that happens, the cannabis law attorneys at McLaughlin & Stern will be ready to assist clients with all of their needs, including fulfilling licensing requirements and maintaining compliance with state and local regulations. That way, business owners will be ready to take advantage of the economic potential offered by marijuana legalization.

McLaughlin and Stern's Cannabis Law Practice Group possesses a comprehensive understanding of the existing laws and regulations governing cannabis cultivation, sale, use and legalization; and, the expertise in place to navigate the rapid changes occurring within those policies. We are dedicated to guiding our clients in understanding the opportunities in the market, along with their rights and responsibilities in this highly controlled field and the quagmires that abound in navigating the multifaceted and ever changing world of Cannabis Law.
