Marcy's practice includes a variety of practice areas, all focused on helping individuals in both personal and professional matters.

Marcy's primary practice spans all areas of family and matrimonial law including divorce, property distribution, child custody, spousal support, child support and prenuptial, postnuptial and separation agreements. In addition to representing clients in complex mediations, since 2006 Marcy has been actively litigating in a broad range of Supreme Court, Family Court and Appellate Court cases. Marcy's experience representing a diverse group of high-net-worth individuals also allows her to consult with her clients on every legal matter affecting their lives, including, but not limited to, business decisions and estate planning.

Marcy's personal interests have led her to form professional relationships with prominent figures involved in New York's hospitality, art, and entertainment industries. She often serves in a consulting role, negotiates contracts, and provides related legal services for artists, gallery owners, restaurant owners and chefs, and media personalities. McLaughlin & Stern provides Marcy access to legal experts in a variety of fields, and she has a broad range of resources outside of the firm to call on as needed.

Marcy has been a regular resource for the media. She has appeared on Good Morning America and has been quoted by ABCNews.com in the July 2010 article, Free Love 'Boomers' Urging Kids to Get Prenups. Her article "Can the Prince Protect His Castle? Pondering a Royal Prenup" was published by the Huffington Post on April 28, 2011. In 2018, Marcy co-wrote a blog for theawl.com titled "Two divorce lawyers watch Divorce", a popular HBO television series.
